Milk Cows.

Market milk is the leading feature of New England dairying. Milk cars for Boston every morning leave northern New Hampshire, central Vermont, western Massachusetts and central Connecticut. Between thirty-five and forty carloads of milk arrive at Boston daily, almost all being of New England origin. The supply of milk for the smaller cities is also a business of large dimensions. The increasing use of cream makes that product of second importance. Maine sends a carload of cream to Boston daily, while large quantities are received from other sections along with the regular milk supply. Much of this market cream is separated by the farmers, gathered by creameries, where it is run through a separator for standardizing and then shipped to the city in bulk.—G. M. Whitaker.

Eating Moldy Corn.

Owing to the losses of live stock from eating moldy corn the scientists of the Iowa Agricultural college are making a study of molds in an endeavor to ascertain the poisonous mold, says Country Gentleman. A farmer near Dallas Center and another in Union county lost about $6,000 worth of stock recently through eating moldy corn. Professor Pammel of the college took up the investigation and so far has isolated four kinds of corn mold. If the poisonous germ can be isolated it is thought it will be the means of saving the live stock owners of the entire large amounts of money annually.

Galicia.

Four-fifths of all the garlic eaten in Europe is raised on the two African islands Zanzibar and Pemba.

THE CORN WORM.

Fall Plowing is the Best Remedy Known at Present.

The caterpillar locally known as the corn worm or ear worm is also known as the cotton boll worm in the south, where it bores into the cotton bolls; the tomato worm in some states, from its habit of boring into tomatoes during the early part of the season, and the tobacco bud worm in the tobacco growing states. This insect probably prefers green corn to any other of its many kinds of food plants.

In the latter part of September and through October the caterpillars that mature in corn go underground to a depth of from two to five inches and change to pupae, passing the winter in this condition. Early in the spring, if the ground remains undisturbed, the moths, which are of a dull clay yellow with indistinct markings on the forewings and expanding from one and a half to two inches, make their appearance and lay their eggs upon such plants as they can find. They lay from 200 to 500 eggs. The eggs are shaped like an inverted teacup, with the vertical ribs converging toward the apex. The caterpillars reach their growth in from two to four weeks. The moths appear in from two to three weeks later. The caterpillars are rather slender and nearly hairless and are from an inch and a half to two inches long. They vary in color from light green to brown and are marked with alternating light and dark brown stripes and lines running lengthwise of the body.

Combating the Insect.

Unfortunately the combating of this insect with any success in the cornfield is still an unsolved problem. It has been found by experiments that plowing in the fall and breaking up the underground sheltered pupae and exposing them to the vicissitudes of the weather will in almost every instance result in their death. However, it is not often practical to plow corn ground in the fall. The effect of such a measure would be to diminish the number of moths the following season.—George A. Dehn in Kansas Farmer.

Feeding Silage.

There are many precautions which must be taken in feeding corn silage, not only because of its effect upon the cow, but because of its effect upon the milk. As a rule, silos are not very plentifully distributed over the country. In fact, they are not nearly so common as they should be, but even at the present time we find milk condensaries and creameries that are refusing the milk products of silage fed cows. This is not because the silage which the cow eats taints the milk, but it is the silage which the cow does not eat that taints the milk. Only last winter in conversation with a prominent milk condenser the writer was given these facts:

This gentleman made the statement that the milk produced on his own farm was produced largely by the use of corn silage, but great care was exercised in the feeding. The reason his company prohibited the use of corn silage in the production of milk by the farmers and dairymen was because of the carelessness with which the silage was fed. The silos were permitted to remain in the barn, and this odor was what ruined the milk.

If the silo connects with the barn by a corridor, the feeding may be as convenient as where the silo is connected directly with the barn. By keeping the doors of the corridor closed the odor from the silo is confined, and if the feeding is deferred until after milking hours there is no reason why there should be any odor of silage whatever in the barn. Oftentimes, however, we find that the cows are overfed of silage, and a portion of it remains in their feed boxes or around their front feet. Naturally this portion of the feed decays and molds, and a very disagreeable odor remains to contaminate the milk.—H. G. Van Pelt in Jersey Bulletin.

Fall Plowing Destroys Insects.

Many insects may be prevented by fall plowing. Land in grass for a number of years often becomes badly infested with cutworms, wireworms and other insects that may prove very destructive to corn and other cultivated crops. If the land is plowed in the fall, the freezing and thawing of winter will destroy a large number of these pests. If, on the other hand, the land were left unplowed until late spring, they would have an ideal place in which to pass the winter and come out in the spring ready to destroy everything in sight. In the case of spring plowing of sod land the food of these insects is suddenly destroyed by the plow, and the few plants of corn or tobacco then put in the ground are not sufficient to feed this horde of insects, and it becomes next to impossible to get a crop started.—Professor J. H. Phillips, Virginia Experiment Station.

Ants in the Cotton Field.

The following are some recent records of the work of the ant shown by examination of squares picked at random from the ground in cotton fields in various parts of Texas: At Beeville, Tex., Aug. 13, out of 874 weevil stages found 684 had been destroyed by ants. In another field, also at Beeville, on Sept. 3, the ants had destroyed 11 out of 117 stages. At Dallas, on Oct. 15, the ants had destroyed 39 out of 247 weevil stages.—W. D. Hunter.

The Test With Grapes.

Grapes should never be picked from the vine till fully ripe and sweet, for they will not develop sugar and ripen after they are picked. I have known unprincipled growers to spoil the market for white grapes by shipping Niagara before they had become ripe and sweet. Tasting is the sure test with grapes.—W. N. Hutt.
